"It was always our aim to find a way to make FIFA more realistic by putting the player in the most authentic setting we could," said Matt Pharr, Creative Director, EA SPORTS FIFA. "We worked with the world's leading motion capture company to bring you the most advanced motion capture performance suits, which capture all the movements of the player's body. This is the most accurate and realistic setting in which to capture and reproduce player movement in-game." Motion Capture Suits Activision and EA Sports partnered with the Danish motion capture specialist Jumping Badja to produce the world's leading motion capture suits. The suits captured every last player movement in full-speed motion during a high-intensity EA SPORTS FIFA 22 gameplay sequence, consisting of several passes, tackles, fouls and headers. The data from 22 real-life players was processed to enable a 100% accurate in-game player model and performance. The mobility and accuracy of these suits has been improved to enable a new level of realism in gameplay. Unique Player Performance Modeling The new physics engine in FIFA 22 is twice as fast than in FIFA 17, reflecting the increased data rate and degree of realism. It provides an enhanced fidelity for player collision, physical collisions with the ball, friction and surface quality. Furthermore, there's a new physics engine that captures key attributes of the player's movement, such as acceleration, running speed, power, balance and bodyweight. Players can now tackle the ball more realistically, particularly as they execute controlled, elegant touches, and players are more aware of their location relative to teammates and opponents. Automatic Tackling Tackle behaviours are brought to life with improved physics, and can now be executed more naturally when players are in contact with the ball and receives a player's tackle. Players are no longer required to manually press a button to initiate a simulated tackle, which will now automatically initiate when players are in contact with the ball, thereby minimizing unnecessary ball juggling and changing of angles, and providing more consistency. Automatic tackling is also smarter and will increase intensity when attacking or when the attacker is physically weaker than the defender. This makes playing against the computer opponents much more challenging, and provides a more authentic, unpredictable challenge than ever before. Improved Ball Physics FIFA 22's ball physics engine is now twice as fast, which gives players and computers more
