Free Download THE PRESIDENT: I had a meeting in the Executive Office Building, in the Eisenhower Building, yesterday in the Oval Office. And I was meeting with a number of the Cabinet officers, leaders from different parts of the business community, different parts of the military, and we had a great meeting yesterday. And I had a great conversation with the Secretary of State. We had a very good discussion on a number of different issues, including some of the recent events in North Korea. We discussed a number of issues, and I'd like to share with you some of the discussions that we had. I would say that North Korea's activities over the last several days have been regrettable, and the world of course doesn't want that to happen. But we're going to be taking care of those issues, and we will be addressing them. But I would say that, on the other hand, we have a great ally in China. They've been very helpful and very supportive of our efforts. We also have a much stronger relationship and a much more constructive relationship with Russia than we've had in the past. There is no doubt that North Korea is a problem, and I think that, as we have long focused on, North Korea will be faced with having to earn its way out of the international community and the community of nations. And there are some steps they have taken, and the United States will be looking for some actions that they take on their side that we can have confidence in. But as I say, those are just ongoing issues, but I would say we have a very strong relationship with China. We have a d0c515b9f4
