A sensitive automated method for determination of sodium fluoride (NaF) in urine and serum using a monolithic column has been developed. Urine and serum samples were treated with diluted nitric acid, and the treated samples were hydrolyzed with perchloric acid. The nitrate-free fluoride ion was determined using boric acid ($B(OH)_6$) and ammonium hexafluorophosphate (NH_4PF_3) in an ammonium buffer system. The NaF concentration was determined using a spectrophotometer at 540 nm. The linearity of the method was 1.2-20.0 $\mu\text{g L}^{-1}$ ($r^2 = 0.9992$) for urine and 0.5-25.0 $\mu\text{g L}^{-1}$ for serum ($r^2 = 0.9997$). The detection limit for NaF was 0.2 $\mu\text{g L}^{-1}$ for both urine and serum, and the quantification limit for NaF was 0.5 $\mu\text{g L}^{-1}$ for both urine and serum. The recovery was $\geq 95.1 \pm 1.5\%$ for urine and $\geq 94.8 \pm 2.1\%$ for serum. Intra- and inter-day imprecision values for NaF were in the range of 1.2-6.7%. The developed method was applied successfully for determination of NaF in urine and serum from volunteer subjects, and their concentrations were in the ranges of 26.9-56.2 (mild acute ingestion) and 7.3-26.9 $\mu\text{g L}^{-1}$ (chronic ingestion), respectively. The developed method is highly selective, accurate, reliable, and simple.// Protocol Buffers for Go with Gadgets // //
