Motion capture data remains unused in FIFA to date. It's a concept that makes a lot of sense: a full match of action in a flowy style of play can't be recreated from filmed replays or play-by-play analysis alone, and the full complexity of soccer's myriad ways to move the ball cannot be recreated. This means that a game that looks exceptionally lifelike must capture and authenticate complex, interplay-dependent behavior in a number of players as they move simultaneously and in relative proximity. For years, developers have looked to film or play-by-play data to make up the shortfall in understanding the physics of play. But what if you could use only data captured in motion, an approach that could be applied to every aspect of FIFA? HyperMotion Technology was the idea of FIFPro, the principal trade association of professional footballers. Spacing the Soccer Staff Game developers are still expensive. Meanwhile, the digital first department was always meant to be the engine of growth for EA Sports, as EA would be cheaper to develop for by utilizing the content that professional sports games already had and was already creating. The year of FIFA 17 was meant to be a time to prepare and expand the digital first department: departments that created and sold content and brought in revenue for the company. This meant that in order to make better use of the resources at EA's disposal, very senior people were put in charge of the existing departments, and new departments that were still unproven were not staffed with senior leadership. The digital first group had generally recruited from industry veterans of various skill sets; we had developers with experience on FIFA, NBA 2K, Madden, FIFA, NHL, and FIFA Street. But when I looked around the studio, I saw a lot of people like me and Joseph Hanson, a game director who joined in the early '00s. I heard stories about how they hired business people and product people and engineering people and took them out to lunch and said, "Hey, guess what? We need you to develop a game. I'd love for you to work on FIFA." But we weren't ready to take that next step. This lack of experience managing people was also a struggle for our Game Director, Richard Hilleman. He had been at the company for more than a decade and

I am wondering is it something that is currently available, if not what can I do to add it? Thanks! A: Well, right now (week of September 25, 2019) it appears that only those marked [status-completed] as meta are visible through the API for now (the API still provides that one). There is no API for visibility filters, unfortunately. I'm not entirely sure if there's a future plan for adding such a thing, nor am I sure what the motivation might be, though. A: No, there is no way to query the system to get all questions that are marked as meta. This was discussed several years ago when the Stack Exchange Data Explorer first shipped as a feature. Meta Stack Exchange has a page of the discussion if you want to read it: Is there a way to query for status-completed questions? Some people have expressed the desire to have filters for the API - but

What's new in Fifa 22:

- The return of playing with a friend - Sharing matches with your friends against a friend's exact team is back! You can now tell your friends what to do, and your friend will watch your game from wherever they are and see how you manage your team.
- FIFA Smart Play: Make better decisions in the action packed world of FIFA 22. This new type of tactical decision making helps you make smart moves in the match. If you are winning, continue the flow of the game and make smart decisions to keep your lead, and if you're losing, use changes to slowly ebb the AI's advantage against your team.
- FIFA Ultimate Team: Add significant new features in FIFA Ultimate Team. Enjoy themed packs, earned trophies and more! Not only are there better stat boosts to earn, this version removes the skill rating cap. You can now earn an unlimited number of stat boosts and unlock every single team with the best possible ratings. Also new to Ultimate Team is the ability to earn trophies. Earn trophies by spending your gold coins on packs that contain unique items. Titles such as 'World League' and 'FIFA World Cup' are available for the world's top football nations. The progress you make in Ultimate Team is visible in the game.
- All-new one player stunt - Use your team's greatest playmaker for each match- what would happen if Messi played one-on-one? You can now play this one-on-one throughout the entire match - with your opponent locked onto Messi, you know when to make the tackle, and you're always in on the goal!
- Relive the action as new stadiums and enhanced gameplay innovation are introduced to FIFA on a regular basis
- New kits and updates to classic kits The standard team kits are now in the update with an all-new team strip and color scheme. A variety of new sponsors, club logos and other team variation elements are also included. FIFA 21 Pro Clubs teams and kits have also been updated. The full 21 kit list is displayed in match day, and you can preview the kits online at FIFA.com/modes.
