Smash: Will we see more lead roles in season four? — You know I've been on this season talking about the lead. Outside of the leads we have been bringing in like Harley [Johanson], now Chris [Pine] who is the first black male lead we've seen on this show and we've been talking about Lele and Ken [Murray]. So as these characters develop and as they see themselves developing, more lead characters are actually gonna emerge. How can you lose a lead character on a show? [Laughs] We're not gonna lose a lead character on this show. Will there be a love triangle this season, or have you ruled that out already? — I would say if you were to take this cast into "the real world," the only relationship that I think we would find that would be difficult would be the love triangle, which a lot of people have been talking about. It's different for each guy. Can you talk about the challenges of casting the female roles on this show? Do you have conversations with lead actresses about how they can bring what they want, or do they bring you their "ideal" versions and then you want to collaborate on it? — I think it's really important to be aware and be very sensitive of what the person is bringing into the relationship. I think we did a great job of casting these roles in the first place. We cast the best actors, the best actresses we could find, and they came in a variety of forms and colors and levels of sexiness and coolness. We just want to make sure that when they're on the screen, they're in the best condition they can be. If they can bring something that's very specific and authentic to who they are and can accomplish what we're trying to do in terms of cinematically pleasing the audience and the show. Do you have a plan for what to do with Malaya. Will we see her head off into the distance or will you make
