The "special relationship" is coming to an end It is time for the United States to extend the olive branch. (Photo: Wikimedia Commons) In an extraordinary secret meeting that took place on Capitol Hill on Monday, senior senators from both parties to discuss a slate of global issues, including Iran and North Korea, discussed a "new special relationship" with China. President Trump was not present. So what do these developments mean for the world's relationship with the US? The notion that the US? The notion that the US and China have a special relationship dates back to the Nixon Administration. However, the concept really took off when President Ronald Reagan elevated the idea to his 1980 "new beginning" speech in which he told his audience that "America and China are bound together not only by the most profound of all human bonds - the bond of character, but also by common interests and values." Later during the Reagan era, China received its first permanent seat on the UN Security Council. e79caf774b
