Additional features include a new Turf Tuning feature, which enables players to individually customize the positioning of every individual blade of grass on the pitch and a new Personalized Matchmaking (PMM) feature that enables players to customize the match difficulty. “We went through and analysed all the football matches recorded at the FIFA U-17 World Cup in India in 2018 and identified the moments of maximum intensity that will power our gameplay,” said Alex Lowe, Director at EA SPORTS FIFA. “We’ve combined those moments with even more data from real-life players’ actions to create a smarter and more reactive engine in FIFA 22.” The new Turf Tuning feature allows players to select from three different Turf Tinting options, including Grass, Snow and Grass/Snow, which will alter the player’s acceleration, balance and stamina. Players can also use a new tactical play area visualisation, which shows how a team in possession will be able to move in different ways within the pitch, whether it’s by running, dribbling or passing, as well as visual indicators of offside and final third chances. The play area visualisation can be used alongside the new Tactical Intelligence in-game feature, which allows players to see the positioning and movement of the opposition team, to plan ahead and make better decisions in and out of possession. “In developing this new technology, we were inspired by real-life football and set ourselves the challenge of collecting data from a real football match,” said Dan Dos Santos, FIFA Producer at EA SPORTS. “When we went to India and put the players in the sim for the first time, we were blown away by the way they played. We could see that they were reactively and intelligently going into different areas of the pitch, creating openings and being very physical, which the real-life footballers were able to do.” FIFA 22 enables players to completely rework their formation and off-the-ball movement with a new Off-the-Ball Tactical AI system. Off-the-Ball Movement allows players to follow their team-mates’ movements and make smart decisions during gameplay. This enables players to control their players in such a way as to create space for them to find and receive the ball. Off-the-Ball Movement is represented in-game by four different systems, including:
